Dedication

In grateful appreciation for the spirit of eager Christian service which exists as the predominating characteristic of their personalities, this book is respectfully dedicated to the Mars Hill College Board of Trustees and, in particular, to Charles M. Wall, whose personal devotion to the cause of education has imbued the hearts of all of us with a fresh cognizance of our own responsibility to those about us.

Administration

DR. R. L. MOORE
President-Emeritus

The steady growth of Mars Hill in all good things should be reflected each year in its LAUREL, and through the years there have been no serious lapses from this high standard. The material development of the College is easily shown; the inner resources of mind and spirit through intangible are yet quite as real and with the passing years more significant. Wisdom, grace, and discretion to those who produce this book!

R. L. Moore

TO THOSE in our midst who have labored diligently here for long years, seeking not material rewards but the joys of establishing a great school and of teaching eager youth, the above picture brings pleasant memories, memories of past friendships, of past happiness, and of a vision then foreseen and now fulfilled. To us of the present the picture is a revelation. It rips away the veil of years and gives us a glimpse into the past, a glimpse of our own great school as it was in its adolescence, four years after the turn of the century. Compare it with a similar view taken this year, or in recent years, and Mars Hill's progress during the intervening period will become self-evident.

HOYT W. BLACKWELL
President

In these days when we are made to think so seriously about the American way of life, let us not forget that all of our other freedoms have come to us as a result of the struggle of our forefathers for religious freedom. The Teacher of Galilee said: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Mr. Herbert Sebren, the young maestro supreme, a member of both the English and Music Faculty, and Miss Elizabeth Ellison, of the silvery voice, also a member of the Music Faculty, have been the helpful and genial sponsors of the Class of 1941 for two years. Their sympathetic co-operation has given harmony to the work of the class and has helped to make the two years at Mars Hill one sweet song for each member.

Class Officers

No class could have been wiser in its choice of a president than this one in its choice of Frank Venters. He has manifested the same enthusiasm, vigor, and dependability in the functions of his office which have characterized his college work.

The work of Gwen Reed as secretary of the Class of 1941 has been a marvel of efficient achievement through earnest effort.

Spontaneous helpfulness, a major attribute of Miss Graham's personality, has made her an ideal vice-president of the Senior Class. In all the thankless duties of a vice-president she has maintained with sweetness her spirit of usefulness.

"Honesty the best policy," the enduring creed of Matt Summerlin's life, has consistently guided his work as treasurer of the Class.

CLIO-PHI STANDING TOGETHER

SINCE THE FOUNDING of the college in 1856 the existence of a campus organization for the literary improvement of its members has been nearly continuous. Until 1890 the group bore the name of the Mars Hill College Literary Society, but in that year a division took place under the leadership of J. J. Ammons, who was president of the old society by its unanimous vote. Tom Blankenship, of Flag Pond, Tennessee, and L. A. Bryan, of Mars Hill, were appointed by the president to serve as the respective temporary leaders of the new Philomathian and Euthalian societies until officers might be elected according to parliamentary procedure. After a period of consideration, Douglas Tweed, of Marshall, was elected to the first presidency of the Philomathian Literary Society, while A. F. Sams, of Mars Hill, gained the same recognition in the Euthalian Society.

The first Philomathian meeting place was the right hand side of the Music Building, occupied until recently by the college bookstore. Here weekly meetings were held for twenty successive school years, until the construction of Moore Hall in 1910, both societies then migrating to spacious new halls allotted them there.

An interesting sidelight is thrown on early society history by recollection of the first query for inter-society debate—"Resolved: That the United States shall perish from the earth as the nations of antiquity have done." The local gentry were quite as much wrought up over the topic as were the society members themselves. It is unfortunate that no record of the decision of the judges is available.

During the following three decades the Philomathians saw many changes and much progress—changes in membership, changes in their hall of blue and white, progress in an indomitably heightening loftiness of society ideals. Yet through all the vicissitudes of those formative years, the Philomathians worked hand in hand with their sisters, the members of the Clio Literary Society, consistently overcoming in the name of truth, purity, and fidelity.

It is with constant recognition of the worth of such ideals that Clio-Phi is this year enabled to assume quarters in a new hall of blue and white—the hall of friendship, as it is frequently called—in the Wall Building, Mars Hill's most recent monument to service in behalf of education. The celebration of the completion of a half century of rigid adherence to such ideals marks an achievement in which not only Clio-Phi rejoices, but also the rest of the college family.

EUTHALIA THROUGH THE YEARS

FIFTY YEARS AGO on a September Saturday afternoon, the members of the Mars Hill Literary Society gathered at their place of meeting for a momentous occasion. They gathered to divide the one society into two. J. J. Ammons, their president, called the meeting to order, and the division began. Out of this meeting emerged the Euthalian and Philomathian Literary Societies.

Lewis Bryan undertook the leadership of the Euthalians until they could draw up a constitution and by-laws, and elect a president in the regular manner. After nearly four months of organization, the Euthalians elected A. F. Sams of Mars Hill as their president; thus began the fifty fruitful years of Euthalian history.

In 1896 the Nonpareil Literary Society was organized and was selected to be the sister society to the Euthalians.

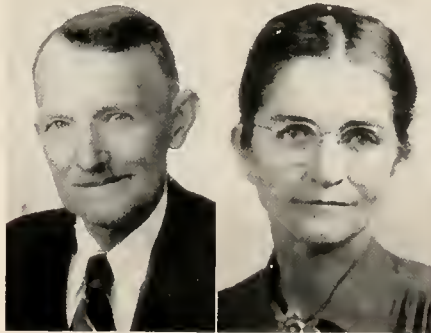

Until 1910, when the present administration building was erected, the Euthalians met in what was then known as the Mars Hill Chapel, the building to which the marker on the circle is dedicated.

As the school grew from an academy with only a few students to a college with eight hundred, so grew the literary societies. The Euthalians started out with about twenty members; at present there are one hundred and thirteen.

From 1910 to 1940 the Euthalians met once a week in their hall in the administration building for the purpose of training the members in the finer things of life. From these meetings came men who today are famous throughout the state and nation. In 1940 the school's new Wall Building was completed and the Euthalians moved from their old hall, full of sacred memories, into their new quarters here. With this moving moved also the spirit of Euthalia. It, too, now abides in the new science building.

In the fifty years between 1890 and 1940, the Euthalians met with many trials and many triumphs, but through it all the ideals of the society were kept ever present in the minds of the members. As long as there is a Euthalia these ideals of dignity, simplicity, and conservatism will go on as the great goals of a great society.
